Patrick Devlin maintained that not only is it reasonable to allow popular morality to guide our actions, but it is essential for the well-being of society. He argued that breaches of shared beliefs about right and wrong do not cause harm to other individuals in the way that murder and assault do, they do harm society by weakening it.

The essence of any society is to prevent harm to others, chiefly physical harm. To achieve this, society must ensure that its collective beliefs about right and wrong are accepted and followed by all members.
