Islam and the Trajectory of Globalization

Essay 2021:10 The book examines the growing tensions between social movements that seek evidence egalitarian and inclusive views of national and global politics, most notably clerical liberalism, and national, international, and popular movements that advance social hierarchy and national exclusivism, such as nationalism, neoconservatism, and nationalist populism. In exploring issues relating to tensions and conflicts around globalization, the book identifies historical patterns of convergence and divergence rooted in the monotheistic traditions, beginning with the ancient Israelites that dominated the Near East during the Axial age, through Islamic civilization, and finally by considering the modern Middle Eastern dynamics in modern times. One theme remained constant throughout the various historical stages that generated our current moment of global convergence: a recurring tension between transnationalism and various forms of realism. Transnationalism, which prioritizes egalitarian and universal values, pushed periodically against the forces of realism that privilege established law and power structures. Equipped with the idealism-realism framework, the book examines the consequences of European realism that justified the imperialistic venture into Africa, the Middle East, and Latin America, in the name of liberation and liberalization. The book considers the consequences of European realism that interrogated the role of the oil membrane in the Middle East, the role of the United States, and the role of the European Union.
