There, she found a century year old portrait of a woman identical to her and a terrifying presence that haunted the decaying halls. Now, weeks later, still mystified by the enchanting Chateau, still plagued by dreams and a mysterious voice, Deavon is forced to seek help from the one man she truly despises. Gavin McTarnin is a handsome charming man. Yet, beneath his thin film of charisma lies a darker sinister layer of evil. When Deavon turns to him for help, her vague explanations lead him to develop an insatiable desire to possess all of her secrets. Still, Gavin craves more. He wants Deavon as well. Soon, Deavon learns that Gavin has arranged a trade with her mother, one that lists her as the goods. Now, desperate to dodge Gavin's advances, and determined to discover her connection with the woman in the portrait, Deavon decides to return to the Chateau. Yet, this time when Deavon steps over the threshold, she unlocks the secret that has been harbored there for over two hundred years and finds more than her heart ever bargained for. An intricate tale of deceitful plots, suspense, and mystery, where what should be, is not, and what could not be, is.
